gures. This may cause some interesting changes in Legislature.

With the 100 members in the House he basis will be one to each 20,616 cople. This would entitle Richmond o about 61-3 members. She now has twe for the old city, and another member has been representing Manchester Thesterfield and Powhatan, as a joint cepresentative. It is probable that Greater Richmond will be given six members of the House direct, and that in addition, perhaps a seventh man will be elected by the city and Chesternield and Powhatan, if the Legislature sees fit to preserve existing lines to that extent.

As to the Senators, this city would be entitled in equity to greater representation than the two she now has. She should have slightly more than 21-2. This might be arranged so as to let the city elect two as at present, and give another to Richmond and therrico.

These figures are, of course, speculaent, and give another to tilenmond and iterrico.

These figures are, of course, speculative, but it is sure that when the Legislature tackles the new figures, it will give the political map of the State a general shake-up.

Wise, for instance, which now with blickenson, clects a member of the House, will be entitled not only to a member by itself, but to about half an additional member. The two counties may get two representatives instead of one.

The South Carolina Senator, who arrived here to-day, was in his committee room at the Capitol and appeared to be as vigorous as he was before he was stricken down by severe illness during the last session of Congress.

Mr. Tillman expects to remain here for four or five days only, however. He will return to his home in South Carolina next week, but counts upon coming back to Washington early in January, when, he says, the real business of the session will begin. He said said to-day that he felt in good condition for work, but that he would not apply himselt so assiruously as formerly.

Mrs. Tillman was by his side, and she emphasized the last remark by declaring that she would keep him as quiet as possible.
"Yes," said the Senator, "she is running the airship, and I guess she will be able to keep it pretty close to fearth."

carth."
Senator Tillman attributes his restoration to health to the fact that since he got out of bed he has been giving his undivided attention to the building of a big barn on his plantation. He said that the work benefited him by giving him something to think about besides himself.
